Another Little Old Anthology. SPINEY CACKTUSS.

SHE died in middle-age, dried up, hook-nosed; Ed Cacktuss, who had suffered long, was free; The women all admitted that "they s'posed He'd marry some young snip-you wait 'n' see!" While Spiney lived they often pitied Ed; He took her old maid sister-forty-two For second choice, and after that they said: "If Spiney'd not been blind she might of knew!"

SPEEDWELL TROTT. THE old town was too slow for him, he thought; The city promised wealth and offered fame; Three years went by, then Speed returned and brought Nine dollers in good money! When he came,
Jeff Skinner met him, looking somewhat sad,
And Speed ashed how things were, and everything,
And Jeff asked, "Been away?" Speed said he had,
And Jeff went on to work and said, "By jing!"

MALINDA FOSTER. CHe owned the millinery shop, and was a blonde; Ort Smith, who had a good wife and a child, Met her, one afternoon, just out beyond The Presbyterian church, and stopped and smiled. They stood there for three minutes-maybe four-And when Lib Courtney and Sue Hill went past They heard Malinda say, "I slammed the door!"

ANTRIM DOOLITTLE. I-IS father ran the bus for twenty years, And never mixted conection with a train; Antrim was freelded and could wag his ears, The fam'ly'd come from somewhere up in Maine. At twenty-three Ant married Mary Stout And tumbled into Adam Hooker's well-Three dollars he had asked to clean it out— Which goes to show that blood'll always tell.

Well, Ort had always been a trifle fast.

You can still make some people mad by calling them Holshevists, but only a few of them get said enough now to fight about it. DESERTED AND SILENT.
